

Human societies will consistently organize into three recurring social classes: upper, middle, and lower. The middle class will eventually rebel, exploiting the mass power of the lower class to overthrow the upper class to eventually leave the lower class as unrepresented and as oppressed as they had been before the revolution.

The Theory and Practice of Oligarchical Collectivism

By Emmanuel Goldstein

“Even after enormous upheavals and seemingly irrevocable changes, the same pattern has always reasserted itself, just as a gyroscope will always return to equilibrium, however far it is pushed one way or the other” (201).

“The aim of the High is to remain where they are. The aim of the Middle is to change places with the High. The aim of the Low (...) is to abolish all distinctions and create a society in which all men shall be equal” (201).

“For long periods the High seem to be securely in power,” but sooner or later it always fall to the hands of the Middle (201).

By the late nineteenth century, the recurrence of this pattern became obvious, to the point that this cyclical process of inequality was the unalterable law of human life. (202)
